Our influences are diverse but we share a desire to make objects that are lasting and unique. We're focused on simple forms, obsessed with tiny details and inspired by the challenge of balancing function and beauty in wearable design. Most of all, we love sharing our work with likeminded people.

Our approach to design is considered and organic. We understand that creating a simple form can be deceptively challenging.

Geometry and playful detail inform our aesthetic, but each AARK design is underpinned by an uncomplicated love of minimalism. Although it's never marked on our products, we hope that AARK's brand is expressed across our collections, and in each watch's originality, simplicity and refined detail.

AQUATIC CREATURES

by Riccardo Capuzzo

Location: Latvia

Minimum Order: $500.00

Number Of Products: 11

The idea is to draw attention to a specific place. These illustrations represent aquatic animals seen through a fantastic and extravagant lens, hyperbole of an enchanting marine world that we should know and safeguard.

I describe the subjects, imagined and sketched on flying sheets, to a team of illustrators who will outline all the details. All illustrations are hand-made using a pencil and then refined with China ink. A high-resolution scan follows, to faithfully maintain the visual characteristics of the hand drawing.

Just as Poseidon controls the seas and oceans, this great sketch gracefully enveloped with an octopus tentacle captures and commands the intricate detailing from every angle.

WOMEN WHO TRANSFORMED DESIGN INDUSTRY IN THE LAST CENTURY THE SCENES

Women have always been working and profoundly influencing the design industry, and sometimes even revolutionized it. Still, their role in design has long been under-represented in literature as well as in galleries and museum exhibitions. The same is the case with women artists. A handful of them we know of today have only come to the public's attention over the last few decades. Intellectuals, society, and the creators themselves began to slowly correct this "failure" of history by giving much-deserved recognition and value to female designers. It's a start that gives room for optimism.

CHARLOTTE PEPERRIAND

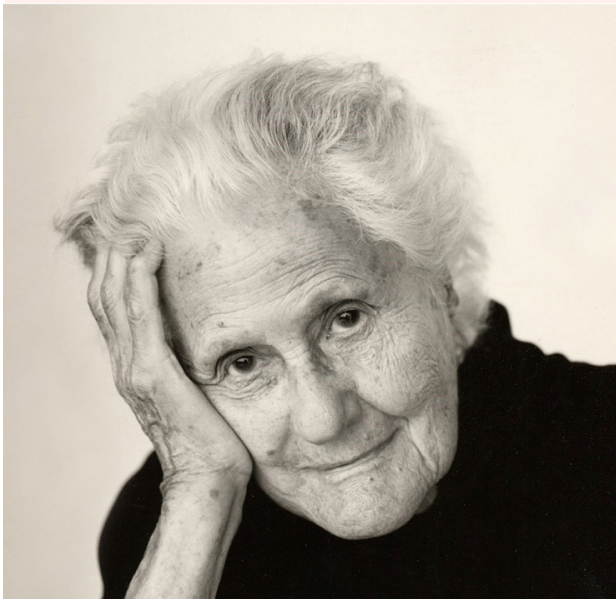

When a young 24-year-old Charlotte Perriand (1903-1999) applied for a job as a furniture designer at Le Corbusier's studio in 1927, she was rejected with a dismissive response, "We don't embroider cushions here." However, the famous architect and designer changed his mind after seeing Perriand's extraordinary rooftop bar exhibited at the Salon D'Automne in Paris the same year. Over the next ten years, Perriand worked alongside Le Corbusier and his cousin Pierre Jeanneret designing the furniture according to the proposed drawings by Le Corbusier. Although Perriand was entirely responsible for solving design problems and inventing a series of chairs, she never received credit for her work. The famous "Chaise longue basculante B306" from 1929 is one such piece. It became one of the iconic examples of early modernism in furniture design and a best seller, but it was not until the 21st century that this beautiful chair with elegant curves and leather upholstery became recognized as the work of Charlotte Perriand.

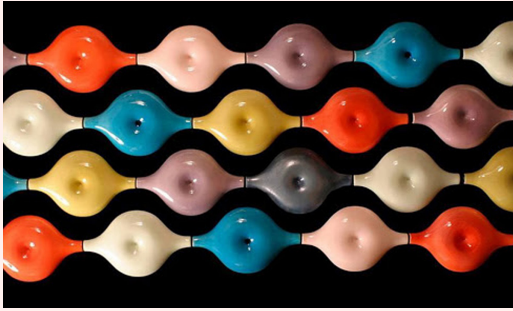

However, after leaving Le Corbusier's studio in 1937, Perriand managed to make a successful career of her own that spanned three-quarters of a century and across continents, from Europe to Asia to Latin America. She experimented with different materials and across disciplines, from furniture to industrial design to architecture focusing on egalitarian design and aiming towards a more affordable, quality and functional mass-produced furniture and housing. This approach culminated in the Les Arc, a modernist ski resort in France designed by an architectural collective led by Perriand. However, her contributions to the history of modernist design and architecture were acknowledged much later after her revolutionary achievements with exhibitions at Musée des Arts-Décoratifs in 1985 in Paris, the Design Museum in 1998 in London, and last year's retrospective "Charlotte Perriand: Inventing a New world" at the Fondation Louis Vuitton in Paris.

EVA SEIZEL

Eva Zeisel (1906-2011) is another heroine of modernist design whose work revolutionized middle-class American homes with simple and elegant tableware. Her career in ceramics started during her studies at the Hungarian Royal Academy of Fine Arts, where she initially entered to study painting. Her designs soon began to attract the attention of international ceramic manufacturers. She worked for companies from Germany to Russia, but not until she emigrates to the US at the start of World War II will her work gain full recognition and praise. The exhibition "New Shapes in Modern China: Designed by Eva Zeisel" in 1946 at MoMA featuring her timeless "Museum" porcelain dinner set was the first show devoted to a female designer. A self-described "maker of useful things," Eva Zeisel designed tableware that is characterized by clean, sensual lines, organic, soft curves, and everyday elegance. Zeisel created a humane and feminine version of modernist design - a "good design" as defined by the critics - by adding sensual and lyrical forms to the modernist principles of simplicity, rationality, and functionality. She believed that women should design the things they use, and perhaps it was with a feminine tone in her designs that she managed to reach so many homes at the time.

SUSAN KARE

Susan Kare (1954-Present) thought she would either be a fine artist or a teacher. Instead, she became a pioneering computer iconographer whose work is now part of the permanent collections of MoMA in New York and SFMoMA. During the 1980s, Kare designed the first-ever computer icons for the Apple Macintosh's graphical user interface. This new visual click-to-command pictorial language was revolutionary since it allowed users to converse with a computer in pictures in a single click instead of typing text commands like before.

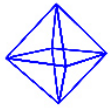

Kare's witty icons were representations of familiar objects, including a trash can for recycling, a floppy disk for saving files, scissors for the "cut" command, a paintbrush for MacPaint, and the legendary curly four-leaf clover-like symbol on the command key on Mac keyboards, among others. The icons communicated their functions instantly and memorably and became commonplace for computer users. Kare gave a human feel to a lifeless computer. We still use her icons today yet entirely unaware of the impact they had on our lives. So next time you click the floppy disk icon to save your document in Word, remember that it's an exceptional work of a woman designer called Susan Kare.

The work of these three extraordinary designers has stood the test of time because it possesses a high level of creativity, boldness, and usability. However, it was valued differently throughout history, depending on the time and place where these designers worked. While we cannot undo the past, we can certainly change the present and the future by giving women hello.

GRES

Minimum Order: $1000

Number Of Products: 15

Created in 2016 by architects Silvana Vergara and Catherine Jessurum, GRES is the organic result of playful experiments with handwoven fabrics. Driven by curiosity and through contact with many local artisans, we noticed a common thread plaguing Colombia's rural communities: the interest in learning traditional crafts and techniques is vanishing; especially among the younger generations, in addition, we noticed that a lack of resources prevented many artisans from acquiring the raw materials necessary to produce their products, which, in turn, are necessary as a means of subsistence.

HOW COVID-19 IS AFFECTING HIGH-END BOUTIQUES

High-end business is not just about superior quality and selling expensive goods and services. It's also about making a personal connection with the customers and offering them an exclusive, tailor-made shopping experience. The ultimate goal of every brand is, after all, to have a community of lifelong loyal customers. Although technology plays a role in this, the high-end luxury market has traditionally been based essentially on the highly-personalized in-store experience of the purchase. With this year's COVID-19 pandemic, this practice, so precious to both brands and luxury shoppers, had to be put on hold and at great expense. Social distancing and personal connection don't go well together.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CUSTOMER EXPERIENCE

Over the last years, high-end brands invested heavily in a unique and luxurious brick-and-mortar experience that focuses on each shopper. The lavishing boutiques like the Gucci Garden in Florence, or the En store in Paris, look and operate more like creative spaces and galleries than stores. In these places, customers are invited to learn more about the brand's exclusivity, artistry, and history, as well as engage with other fans. Today's luxury shoppers don't just pay for the brand's name. They equally value the whole in-person shopping experience of getting something exclusive that will make them feel special. The idea behind this trend is to play on buyers' emotions and personal aspirations, and by offering them an authentic and unique experience, brands are winning customers' hearts and loyalty. Unfortunately, the COVID-19 has spoiled it all for Gucci bag fans this year.

But the special role of brick-and-mortar stores is not at all exclusive to the luxury fashion industry. Companies like Leica Camera and Apple have invested heavily in their hands-on showrooms welcoming customers to try their products and get in-depth technical advice and recommendations. Offering local repair services and organizing workshops further enhance the unique person-to-person experience.

SMARTPHONES ARE THE NEW SHOPPING MALLS

With imposed stay-at-home orders all over the world and temporary closures of non-essential businesses, the pandemic has changed shopping behaviors overnight. It has pushed people more towards buying online. Smartphones have become the shopping malls during the coronavirus pandemic. According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, e-commerce sales grew more than 30% between the first and second quarter of 2020. However, economic uncertainty has caused many to stay away from irrational purchases and focusing on buying essentials. Hence, the luxury industry has been hit hard this year. At the very outset of the pandemic, many of the high-end retailers were already experiencing huge losses, and some of them had to shut down dozens of stores like Neiman Marcus. The world's leading luxury conglomerate Louis Vuitton Moët Hennessy (LVMH), recorded a 27 percent decrease in sales in the first half of 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic that resulted in temporary store closures. According to Vogue Business, a potential loss for the luxury industry in 2020 will be $10 billion. The projection is based in part on the fact that Chinese buyers account for a third of global luxury consumption both inside and outside China and their spending has reduced significantly since the beginning of the year with forced travel restrictions.

HIGH-END BRANDS NEED TO ADAPT TO MEET CHANGING NEEDS

It is safe to say that an unprecedented turn towards more digital buying triggered by the COVID-19 pandemic is likely to have lasting effects on luxury retail. Surely brick-and-mortar stores will eventually re-open. However, for high-end boutiques to emerge from the current crisis successfully means extending their e-commerce and improving online luxury offerings. Investing in digital luxury retail requires a shift in mindset: instead of using online channels to bring customers to physical stores, luxury brands need to think about how traditional brick-and-mortar shops can help increase their online sales. A key challenge is to provide customers who are accustomed to exclusive in-person shopping with a high-quality personalized shopping experience online. Investing in social media channels and phone and live chat support is crucial to meet this need. Others, no less important aspects of adapting to e-commerce include investing in reliable and secure shipping solutions, simplifying returns, ensuring high standards customer service as well as using safety measures to eliminate health concerns. To what extent luxury brands are ready and willing to adapt to change to cover the new customer needs and habits that have arisen we'll see in the next period. One thing is for sure - their future success depends on it.

While the COVID-19 pandemic strongly impacted the manner of operating physical stores, Apple Store seems to have found a way of doing business safely and successfully in these unprecedented times. After going back and forth with closing and reopening their shops, Apple decided to keep their customers safe and satisfied by limiting service to Apple Store pickup of online orders and allowing in-store shopping with a Specialist and Genius Support service with scheduled appointments. By introducing these modifications, the company continued to offer a successful in-store visit to their customers despite COVID-19 limitations. Moreover, Apple set an example of how to further improve the customer in-store experience with coordinated online and offline services, which could benefit all retailers even after the pandemic is over.

The objects that accompany us daily deserve to be more than accessories, they are full of stories, emotions and details. They are accomplices and tools. Speaking of design, it is not only to refer to the typical object that is acquired to be placed immobile in a room, but to achieve better objects to carry in your pockets every day, simple objects, which are frequently used in a better way. Really transcendent objects.

The Essential arises under the premise of the designer Adolfo Navarro to design simple objects in durable materials that can be used daily. The project was born in 2013 with the initial objective of designing a collection of objects that in a single piece of genuine leather managed to provide the greatest possible utility. Beyond being another redundant reference of exclusive and incoherent fashion, Lo Esencial is a proposal with neat, high-quality objects, whose functionality, utility and simplicity are.

Ark of Crafts is a socially responsible business committed to bridging artisanal Turkish traditions with modern living. Cigdem Toraman and Nilufer Sener—colleagues and friends with decades of experience in entrepreneurship, marketing, media, and finance—joined forces to create Ark of Crafts. In the face of cheap industrial products, longstanding Turkish traditions are slowly dying. But authentic Turkish goods that reflect time-honored traditions and years of experience should be treasured—and available for all to enjoy. With this shared goal in mind, Cigdem and Nilufer set out to find the best artisans from all around Turkey, congregate them on a digital platform, and introduce them to the world. They traveled around the country and met with copper masters, weavers, ceramic artists, block printing artisans, miniature artists, and more. In 2013, they launched arkofcrafts.com. In early 2017, they launched the clothing and textiles label loom.ist, a line for timeless, comfortable living.

We wanted Mardin, the most fascinating city of this glamorous land, to be a part of our journey. We put the words “Luna”, which means Moon Goddess, and “Merdin” (City of Castles) - the former name of Mardin which is the 7,000 - year-old capital of Mesopotamia, together.

At Luna Merdin, we revive each civilization with our authentic accessories’ collections.

If you happen to travel around Mesopotamia, you can come across the figures with special meanings which are used on our accessories; on the walls of a castle, on the wall of a house, on the minaret of a mosque, on the monument of a temple or on the embroidered wooden door of a church.

CRAFT RENAISSANCE

Traditional and contemporary designs are two distinct styles and approaches that seem mutually exclusive. While the first refers to something that is produced following the long-established tradition and belonging to the old world, contemporary design, by definition, involves trends that are happening today. But what is contemporary here and now won't be in ten years, but rather something entirely different. This very feature of constant change is what makes contemporary design so dynamic, heterogeneous, and receptive to integrating new ideas with old concepts and knowledge.

TRADITION AS A SOURCE OF INNOVATION

In the hands of an expert, traditional and contemporary can work pretty well together. If innovation is about making new combinations and bringing new meanings, tradition may as well be a source of innovation. Many contemporary design studios look at tradition this way, deriving ideas and inspiration from traditional techniques, materials, and styles, while still doing things their own way. At the same time, while designing products for the international market, they are creating economic opportunities for local artisan and handmade productions. Their unique products target niche markets within which demand for original, high-quality, socially responsible design with traditional resonance is growing. In the age of globalization, we all own the same products. However, more and more consumers want authentic, timeless, and socially conscious products that embrace the value of the old world and still give the comfort of contemporary life.

SOCIALLY RESPONSIBLE DESIGN

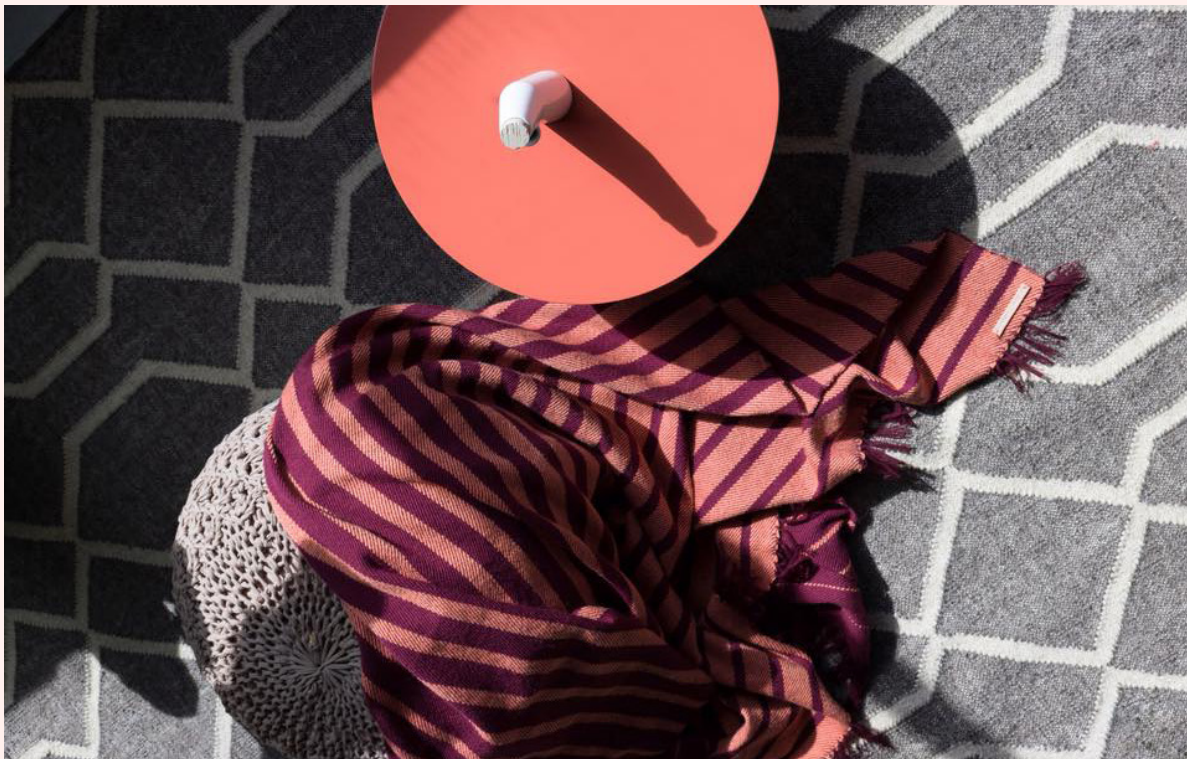

Aztro proudly works with brands that use and reinvent traditional techniques and aesthetics to create new valuable product meanings with a contemporary twist. Jadzia Lenart and Wiktoria Podolec from a weaving studio Tartaruga approach design as art. They create unique, eye-catching hand-woven kilims, rugs, and wall hangings that stand in opposition to the mass textile industry. Their carpets are made only once without ever repeating the same design out of leftovers from carpet mass-production. With a desire to preserve local artisanal knowledge and values, all of their products are handmade with traditional tools and techniques.

The design studio GRES was born out of a desire to keep local Colombian hand-woven techniques from vanishing. Their beautiful series of pillows and blankets honor Colombian traditions in craftsmanship while fitting into contemporary homes with elegant patterns and neutral colors.

THE HUMAN TOUCH

Unlike mass-produced products, each handmade item is the creation of a single person who invested his or her time, skills, and passion for making it. There are no two identical handmade products, which makes them unique and exclusive. Buying a handmade item means owning something special with a human touch and a story behind it. Plus, they are green as it takes less energy to produce handmade pieces, and they don't require mass transportation like items made on a mass production line.

All of these brands revitalize the tradition by combining old and new components in their design approach and thus building a new appreciation for it. Inspired by their heritage, they embrace their social responsibility to preserve long-established traditional techniques and create products with new meaning and purpose. Bridging the gap between contemporary and traditional, these designers offer to consumers something that could be passed down through generations - a product with a character and added value. Something that fits equally into a contemporary home as well as the consumers' beliefs!

Bold, kinetic and sculptural with an elegant interplay of angles and curves, Vanessa Gade's jewelry makes a contemporary statement balanced with timeless style. The diverse urban landscape of San Francisco provides the ideal creative backdrop for Vanessa's work and can be seen in the architectural qualities of her jewelry designs. The structural nature of her pieces is gracefully countered by a fluidity and movement influenced by her love of the ocean and her youth along the beaches of Southern California.
